2. After buds are fully developed, usually in September, plants should be kept in cool place till ready for benching.
3. Bench about November 1st with night temperature about 60°. Raise temperature if necessary to 65 or 70°. A low nitrogen-medium phosphate fertilizer may be added at start of forcing period.
4. In areas where soil or water is alkaline, aluminum sulphate or iron sulphate at the rate of 1 oz. to 3 gallons of water every 2 weeks may be used if needed.

How to Grow Red-Wing Azaleas for Late Winter and Spring Forcing

Make last pinch in July or August and when plants are ready to make buds, they should be kept in a Greenhouse or Lath House that has a fairly high day temperature and cool night temperature.

A self liquidating investment because they make use of existing sprinkler irrigation systems to bring the flower grower fully automatic fertilizing—thus eliminating a separate costly fertilizer operation. Comes complete with transparent hoses, aluminum venturi and necessary patented equipment to do an outstanding job. The Dragon Applicator is a tank arrangement that can be connected to the main line. The applicator is charged with the amount of fertilizer required for the area covered by the operating sprinklers on a per acre basis and the speed of application can be controlled as desired.

walls!

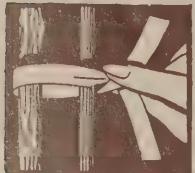

Beautifully enameled flower pots are designed so plants can breathe through porous wall.
